

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

A system and method for recovering a database table that depends on a tablespace receives a backup copy of the tablespace and reads log records associated with the table.

5 The system then applies the log records to the backup copy and builds new table data pages from the backup copy. Finally, the system scans the new table data pages for records of the first table and updates the table from the records.